SEPTEMBER, 1959

KING EDWARD VI. SCHOOL,
BURY ST. EDMUND'S,
SUFFOLK.

Headmaster's Notes

ANOTHER year in the School's long history has come to an end. We believe it to have been a successful year. September will see more records broken, with over 400 boys in the School, and a Staff of 18. Until the second half of the building programme comes into being administrative problems are bound to be enormous, and of daily occurrence, commencing with the morning assembly.

Sad that the most perfect summer we can remember for many years should have witnessed the lethargic progress of the swimming pool towards completion and that the term should end with a toad as the sole beneficiary. Perhaps we shall be permitted to join it in September.

If all goes well the pool should in time be flanked by one hard tennis court and, later, two more in a perfect setting for summer activities.

Spanish will be added to the curriculum of the School for the first time in September — a subject that is likely to become increasingly popular with us as its merits become known.

We have become so used to our heavy winter programme of entertainment and educational films that we have tended to forget for how many years our 16 mm projector has been in use and that excessive wear is becoming apparent. We aim to have the latest model within the next few months — and, for that matter, a first class tape recorder.

Our two big functions of the year, Speech Day and Founder's Day, passed off most successfully. All are to be congratulated on the hard work that went into each, and we are grateful to the Recorder of Bury St. Edmund's, Mr. P. Colin Duncan for attending Speech Day and giving such an effective and entertaining address, and to the Revd. K. Wilkinson Riddle, Vicar of St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich, for his address on Founder's Day. Many believe that our Founder's Day Service is a very old established one — it was actually introduced shortly after the Very Rev. J. L. White came to the Cathedral as Provost, and to that extent will always be a memorial to him.

Mr. Brush carries with him to his new post our very sincere thanks for his work done here, and our best wishes for his future happiness. We welcome Mr. Rumsey, with his wealth of experience, as his successor — as we welcome Mr. Nobes to assist in the teaching of English, and Mr. Parry to introduce us to Spanish.

Inconstant

The flames flickered and danced in the brazier, but they lent no comfort to Peter, who slumped in a shadowy corner sick and cold. The servants in the kitchen of Caiaphas's house were chattering about the capture of the important prisoner—how that shy little Judas had marched upon him backed by the torchbearers and soldiers in Gethsemane that night and planted a firm kiss on his master's cheek.

But Peter was too numb to listen. He was living in a nightmare, in which the shadows of the room seemed to form the face of his Lord, suffering in the long hours of silence which had preceded the betrayal.

"Before cockcrow you will deny me three times."

It was impossible.....unthinkable. He was Peter, the fisherman—the broad, sinewy fighter. Had he not cut off the ear of the wretched Malchus before the assembled mob of conspirators?

He looked despairingly at the interrogation-room. What were they doing to him in there? He had heard the sound of laughter, but not so much as a groan. If only he could break in and drag them away from his Lord. If only.....

A hand descended on his shoulder. A girl's face was before him, almost a silhouette before the window, through which the first cold light of Jerusalem dawn was already filtering.

"Haven't I seen you before somewhere?" she asked. Then her eyes opened widely as she recognised the form of the huddled man. "You were with the Galilaeen, weren't you?"

A sharp crack cut through the gloom. It was the sound of the nine-thonged flagellum. Peter's mouth was dry, and the veins stood out in his neck.

"I've no idea what you're talking about," he growled. "Leave me be, will you?"

A laugh resounded along the adjacent corridor, and another crack echoed its way into the room. The girl gave him a strange look and passed on. "Having a fine time in there, aren't they?" somebody said. The sweat was falling from Peter's forehead, and he felt that his head was bursting. While the noise of the scourging continued, he lurched into the doorway to gulp the night air. Another girl was looking at him from within the kitchen. "Naomi," she called, "doesn't this man look like one of the people that followed the Nazarene?" This captured the interest of the bystanders, who left their places to crowd around him. "The girl's off her head!" Peter rasped.

"Who are you, anyway?" one of them asked. The first pink fingers of dawn lit the shadowed doorway. He swallowed. Now for it.....but the words refused to come. He turned upon them, cursing savagely.

"I tell you I've never met the damned criminal. For all I care he can go and rot, and so can you! Can't you leave me alone?" Cowed by his ferocity they resumed their seats. Another crack. A distant cock could be heard crowing. Peter stumbled outside. A nearby door opened, and a bent figure was dragged out by two soldiers. In that cold dawn the blood was running down the Master's white, seamless robe. His face was bruised and bleeding.

As they passed by him he gave Peter one look—a look of pity and infinite sadness. Those eyes were still tender and luminous. Peter stood stock-still, watching the figures until they rounded the corner and were lost to view. Then his iron restraint snapped, and he found himself sobbing like a child, for shame, remorse and despair.

And as the sun turned from crimson to gold, the tall fisherman, his back bowed with grief, swung northwards towards Galilee and home, his eyes red with weeping, through the streets of wakening Jerusalem.

Requiescat

When De Lorge came out of the graveyard the wind was blowing cold. There had been a large number of mourners at the old man's funeral—the whole village had been there, as well as the other parishioners from the surrounding locality. Many had wept openly—he had been a good priest and a fine man—and many more had laid comforting hands upon young De Lorge's shoulder. He had insisted on taking the service himself—for he had lived with the old man for seven years, and was the obvious candidate for the priesthood of the village, having served his time as sub-curé.

He walked slowly home to the house and mounted the steps of the sloping garden. He let himself in by the front door, and, passing into the study, sat himself by the fire. Above him stood an early portrait of the old man, serious, young and intelligent. He had been so easily duped—for he had been of an exceptionally trusting nature.

It had been, thought De Lorge, like a great practical joke. The blackmail of the old doctor Dupré, whose secret he still knew, had been supremely simple. The signed death-certificate and the touching burial had been attended to with.....yes..... a genius. The old man had had poison, in increasing doses, in his prescribed medicine for the past three weeks.

Now with an increased stipend he could live in comfort. He was sick of being told what to do by the old fool. Nobody knew better than he the chagrin of seven years as a subordinate. De Lorge was a proud man, and as he looked up at the picture a feeling of exultation warmed him. He was free.

Now he must write the sermon for next Sunday. The parishioners would expect sorrow to be mixed with courage. Well.....he would not disappoint them. "Friends," he would say, "your constant prayers in my time of difficulty and grief have been of infinite comfort to me, and I wish to thank you ....."

He rang the bell for Marie, who entered the room quietly. He must soon give her notice. She had been very thick with the old man, and would bring back memories to him that he preferred to forget.

"Monsieur rang for me?"

"Yes, Marie. I should appreciate it if you would bring me a cup of coffee and some biscuits. I shall only need a light tea tonight."

"Very well, Monsieur."

"And see that the coffee is well-sugared, Marie."

"Yes, Monsieur, I will bring the sugar in."

He watched her waddle out of the room. How old she was! But like so many simple people, she disdained the advantages of modern civilisation. Glasses, for instance. She was phenomenally short-sighted, but she preferred to rely on what she called her 'intuition.' He smiled grimly. A lot of good her intuition did when she had taken up the old man's medicine to his room twice a day. He didn't know what old Dupré had put into the brew—he mixed it in the kitchen every day—but it had certainly done the trick. A bird rustled outside the window.

By the time Marie came in with the tray the sermon, "Love your Enemies," was taking shape.

He sat down and sugared his coffee with a silver spoon. To have a brain and an imagination among these village rustics was worth a cask of gold. Imagination breeds power.....the mind is a treasure-house of enormous wealth if a man can find it in him to be sufficiently unscrupulous.....He sipped his coffee. It tasted peculiarly bitter. He stirred it again vigorously, adding more sugar. Power.....wasn't that all a man needed? Over a kingdom or a parish it was the same—as long as it was power. He could never really appreciate the Temptation in the Wilderness. To throw the whole world away for .....He glanced at crucifix on the sideboard. An effigy symbolic of pain. It glinted in the fireglow. As he drank it seemed to tremble. Now its outstretched arms were swaying wildly..... drunkenly. The wall rocked in silent chorus, the fire grew and grew till it exploded in a thousand crosses, each one stabbing pain into him. De Lorge fell forward on to the table.

By his stiff, outstretched arm the bowl of cyanide flickered its reflection of the fire into the gathering dusk. Dupré smiled and turned away from the window. Secrets, thought the good doctor as he made his way home, are not made to be shared.

Wolf

They had toiled all day up a steep incline, and now, at evening, the dark, tree-lined mass of the Hartz Mountains lay beside and below them, silent and austere. A small tent had been pitched and Kranz was boiling the eggs they had bought at a farmhouse far down in the valley. Holt, the guide, had somehow contrived to build up a roaring fire of brushwood, by which they were now sitting, the latter pulling occasionally at an old meerschaum.

The stillness of the place was cut now and then by the far-off howling of a wolf—but even the shrill note of the solitary creature seemed to carry with it a little menace in the vast obscurity of the pinewoods.

Holt's face, in daylight astute and thin, gleamed gauntly over the flames, his eyes staring inscrutably ahead of him. Kranz, rubicund like a typical peasant, picked thoughtfully at the ground with a twig.

"I don't like the sound of that wolf," the latter said at last. In the gloom Holt grinned.

"No need to worry about wolves. They never come near a fire, you know."

"I know, I've lived in the country long enough to realise that" the other replied, "but.....I should like to go back tomorrow. This country around here has something about it that I've never met before. It has a.....a sinister aspect that I've never encountered back home."

"But surely you're going to come as far as the Vonsbruck Gorge. It's what you've come to see. The view will more than make up for a couple of evenings on the mountain-side. You don't mean to say you're afraid.....?"

"No.....but.....all the same.....I'd like this trip to be as quick as possible."

"My dear sir, if the howl of a wolf scares you as much as that, then we will descend immediately the sun rises tomorrow. But I am a little disappointed. If anybody has had experience of wolves, it is I. In our village there came down from the mountains a young man. Nobody seemed to know from whence he came, but a farmer's family took him in and treated him well, giving him a job in their orchard.

"He was a taciturn young fellow, but he worked well, according to the farmer. He took an instant liking to the two small children of his employer and there was nothing he enjoyed more than to take them for walks and to tell them stories by the fireside. The girl took a delight in watching him work.

"Then one spring night a piercing cry was heard. The farmer leaped out of bed and dashed downstairs. He flung open the door of the house, yet saw nothing. He went into his garden, but there was nothing to be seen. Returning to the house, he called his family together. Everyone trooped downstairs—except for his little daughter. Panic-stricken he searched the house high and low, then organised a search-party among the villagers.

"The girl was found early in the morning, lying in a thicket in the neighbouring wood. She had been terribly mutilated. The villagers agreed that the claw-marks upon her could only be the work of a wolf.

"The farmer mourned her bitterly, and his wife, unable to withstand the shock, declined gradually and died before the year was out. In his misery, he turned for companionship to the young man, who was full of words of solace and comfort.

"But one night the villagers were roused by yet another scream. Dashing into the little farmhouse, they found the farmer dead upon the floor. He also had been horribly savaged, and on his face was a look of the most terrible horror.

"Nothing was ever heard or seen of the young man from that day to this."

"And for the son.....?"

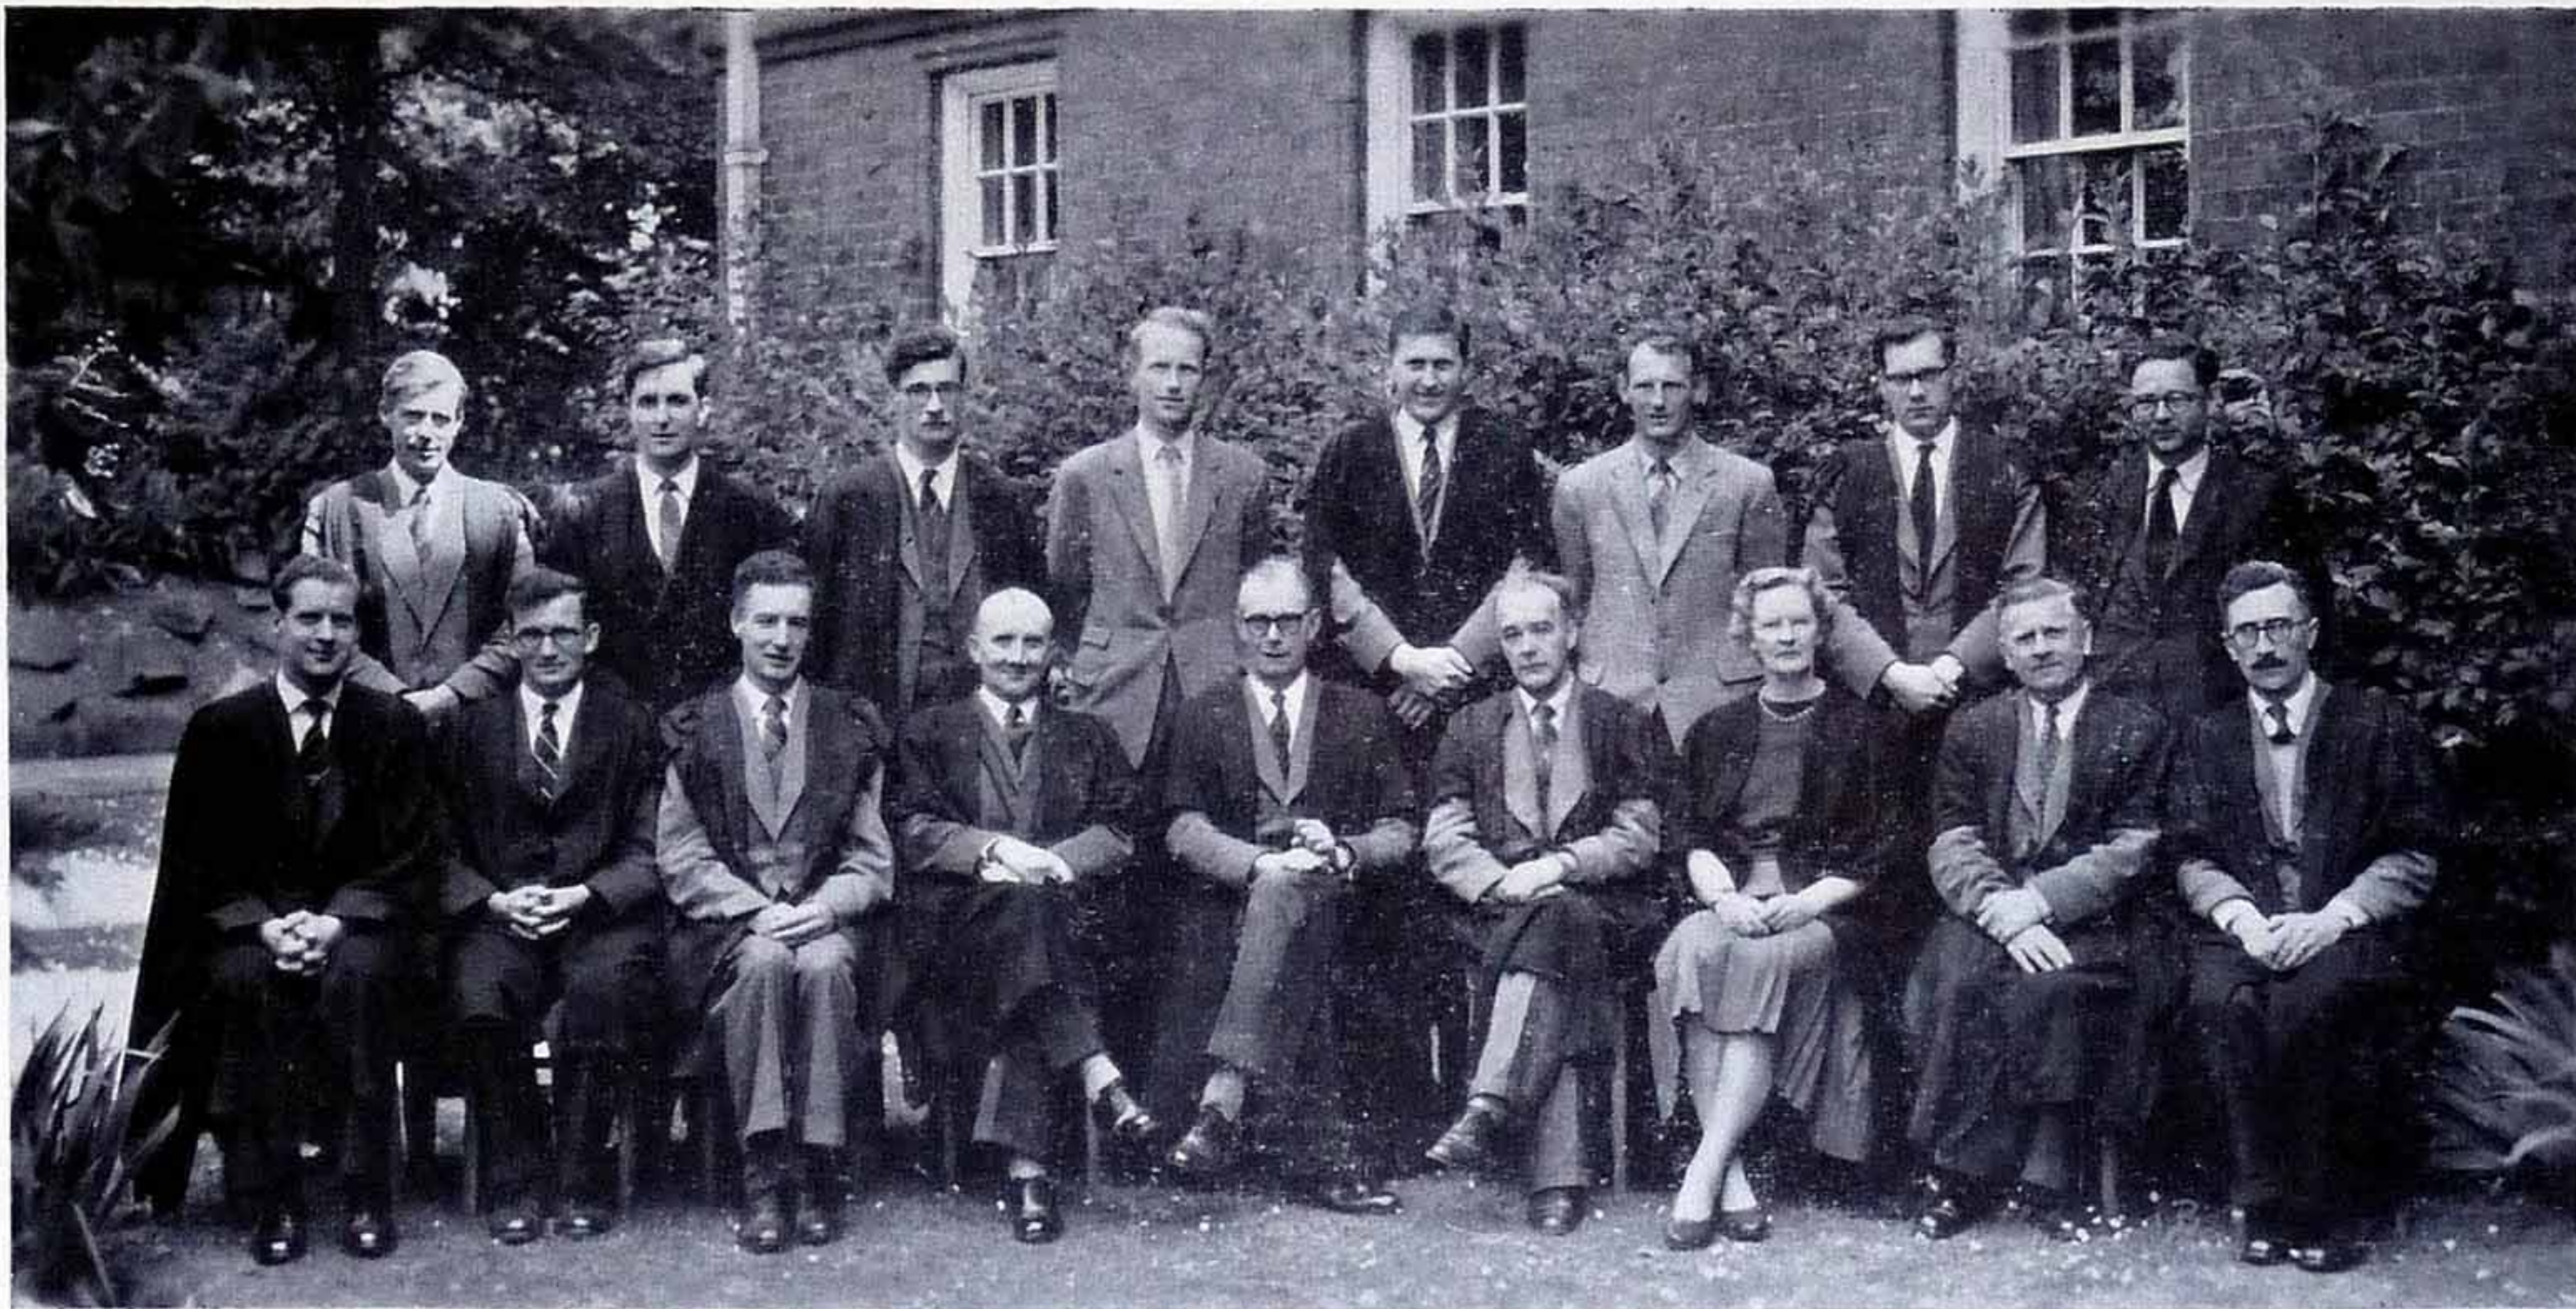

"He was looked after by a family of kindly peasants, who brought him up to know these.....things.....well."

In the glare of the fire the two men faced each other silently. Then :

"Why do you tell me this?" asked Kranz.

"You know," answered the other, "and I know also."

Holt's eyes were lurid and red. His sharp white teeth flashed.

The Burian.

"It is meet," agreed Kranz, "that one of us should die." As he said this his face seemed to undergo a transformation. From the paunchy redness of the countryman, it turned ashen white. The lips tightened to show the barest hint of fangs. Under the moon came a cloud. When it had drifted past, a white wolf crouched before Holt, ready to spring. A revolver flashed into Holt's hand, and he fired three times, very deliberately. "That for my sister," he said softly. "And that for my mother, and that for my father." The echoes ebbed away slowly.

Then he arose and walked down the mountain, disappearing finally among the pines. The fire caught the clothes of the corpse. For a while the stillness blazed, then died away. A wolf howled again, far off.

Othello

Some members of the Fifth and Sixth forms were fortunate in having the opportunity of seeing 'Othello' at Stratford-upon-Avon earlier this term. Our sincere thanks are due to the Headmaster and to Mr. Bridges who made the necessary arrangements.

Despite many adverse but constructive press criticisms we went to see this production with an open mind and at the close we felt that many of them had been unjustified, unless Mr. Glyn Byam Shaw had radically altered his production.

The curtain rose on a very dark set, Brabantio's house, which had too much of the atmosphere of symbolic simplicity. We saw amid the gloom Iago and Roderigo, who incidentally was a most successful 'gulled gentleman,' both indulging in what appeared to be a version of jiving, which fortunately had but a brief duration. This was our first meeting with Iago and we saw how he behaved towards Roderigo whom he uses for his diabolical purposes. We waited for the Moor: when he 'appeared' we could not see him for the gloom but we most certainly could hear him. Throughout the play his rich, titanic voice was to be heard booming and even when it was reduced to a sob, every syllable was heard, and it touched the hearts of all.

THE PREFECTS, JULY, 1959

THE PREFECTS, JULY, 1959

Tragedy springs from an obsession and concerns the downfall of a great one through some flaw in his character which grows slowly and malignantly until it covers the whole. Othello's calamity is brought about by sexual jealousy, a pathological disease. His personality, though heroic, calm, honourable, confident, candid and dignified, is soon poisoned and distorted by Iago's evil: Iago, "a common-fellow, foul-minded and course-tongued," abounding in guile and vitality. Indeed, the part of Iago is more of a problem to the actor than is that of Othello, but it was agreed that Paul Robeson was very nearly perfect in his portrayal, and the sole actor who could speak the Shakespearian lines as poetry.

Mr. Sam Wannamaker, pronounce the name as you will, played his part, for some brilliantly, for others poorly. In many respects he was 'the perfect villain,' and indeed Mr. Paul Robeson himself said in an interview that when he was on the stage he felt that his only friend was Iago. He was the villain in his soliloquies and that proves Mr. Robeson's point, namely that Iago in this production was successfully "two-faced."

The story is one of passion, one of jealousy. Iago is bitterly jealous of Othello, who himself has in him the seeds of it. The tragedy is best summed up in the Moor's own words; the tragedy

Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well:
Of one not easily jealous, but being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme; of one whose hand,
Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away.

That naturally leads us to the 'pearl,' Desdemona, played by Mary Ure. A character who is a maid so tender, fair and happy, and

A maiden never bold;
Of spirit still and quiet that her motion
Blushed at herself.....

Rarely did the actress attain these heights of beauty, nobility, loyalty, kindness and honesty; she spoke her beautiful lines very much in the same way as she might in one of John Osborne's holocausts of nausea. Only in the last scene did she achieve anything that was Desdemona's, after the shock of

That cunning whore of Venice
That married with Othello.

Emilia, played by Angela Baddely, was excellent in her portrayal of "pure clay." Bianca was the perfect hussy : Brabantio, unfortunately, was not successful. It is a part which 'swings between extremes', and is, therefore, extremely difficult to act convincingly. The Duke of Venice, a wheezing asthmatic, was an interesting variation but it was wasted. Cassio, "an Honourable Lieutenant," was colourless and well-meaning, nothing more, which was Shakespeare's intention. The sets were, generally speaking, effectively constructed : one interesting illusion was created by clouds swirling through a storm-tossed sky on the isle of Cyprus. It is difficult to say all that one would wish in a small space, but such were our feelings of this tragedy of violent delights' ending in a violent and cruel way, with choking dread and blind fury rising and rising.

Song—to Pan

Glory to the God of harmonies:
For rustling leaves that deepen the blue sky ;
Hedge-sprays on water, pink anemones
All sunset-seared, on feathered clouds that fly ;
White blossom-carpet steeped in morning rain,
In the blurred haze of rising river-mist,
Or treetops, tinted with a pastel stain,
That shiver on a dawn of amethyst.
Where muted Pan still haunts the riverside
With soft lament, when the cool hours draw near,
Silence preserves a ghost when day has died.
Stop still and wait, for harmony is here
Prisoned in shadows ; and the forest knows.
And bows its branches where the Exile goes.

Athletic Sports

SCHOOL SPORTS

This year we were most fortunate in having a fine day for our Athletic Sports, a factor which greatly added to the enjoyment of both competitors and spectators.

The general standard of athletics improves every year. This year five new records were made. This brings the total number of records broken during the last five years to 20, with only 13 records still to be beaten.

The Challenge Bowl was won by Windsor House, after a close struggle with the Yorkists ; Tudor House finished third.

The School Champion was P. W. Garrard, who achieved this through his fine all-round performances, especially in the field events in which he established a new Discus record with a throw of 140' 8". Garrard also won the Adrian Gould Cup.

The Under 15 Champion was R. J. Fuller who, although he actually tied with L. Herbert, won the championship by obtaining a greater number of Standard points. The Under 13 Champion was J. A. H. Knight, a most promising runner, who broke the 220 yds. record by 1.2 seconds — a very fine performance.

THE WEST SUFFOLK ATHLETIC CHAMPIONSHIPS

We entered a full team in these sports and achieved a fair measure of success. A list of those boys who secured a place in the first three appears below.

It was very encouraging to note the improvement in the field events, especially in the Intermediate Discus, 15-17, where we gained all three places.

It was no surprise to find that we won the School Championships in the 15-17 age group, although in the Under 15 age group I was disappointed by the showing of some of the younger boys, who achieved very little. Success goes in cycles however, and I am confident that our turn will come again in the very near future.

SUFFOLK SCHOOLS ATHLETIC CHAMPIONSHIPS

We had a record number of boys selected to represent West Suffolk, when thirty two boys were invited to take part, twenty eight of whom actually competed.

We can be well satisfied with their contribution to West Suffolk's third successive victory in these Sports. We gained three individual winners and many other boys gained places in the first three.

P. J. Gardner won the 15-17 Discus with a fine throw of over 140'. J. Grout won the 17-19 Discus and J. A. Brennan won the 15-17 Shot Put with 40' 2½". These boys, and indeed all those who participated in the Sports, deserve our congratulations.

CRICKET REVIEW

The record of winning eight, losing two, and drawing four, shows that the School Eleven has had a successful season. It is pleasing to note that the record contains only four draws compared with the previous season when only five of the matches provided a definite result.

The opening batsmen for the majority of the season were Reed and Gillingwater, and they gradually settled down into a sound opening pair. Flack, Crowe and Rutterford all batted well for much of the season and only in a few of the matches did the responsibility of making a respectable total come to rest on the shoulders of the later batsmen. Lines, Dutton and Kemp, however, always showed they were capable of scoring runs when required.

Owing to the unfortunate illness of R. J. Downing the School started the season without the service of a regular wicket-keeper. Two wicket-keepers were tried, Whiting playing for the majority of the season with his usual enthusiasm. Reed took his place for the last few matches and played exceptionally well. The rest of the fielding, however, rarely reached the required standard.

Lastly our thanks are extended to Mr. Dart for an excellent fixture list and to Mr. Wyard for preparing the pitches.

 Lost.

This has not been a very successful season although the cricket was better than the results would seem to indicate. Inability to concentrate and play themselves in was the major weakness of the batsmen and at least two matches slipped from our grasp because of extremely lax fielding.

The Under 14 XI, captained by K. English, is to be congratulated upon a successful season. Of the nine matches played, seven were won, and only two lost, one of these by a narrow margin. The standard of the bowling and fielding was good, but the batting was on the whole weak. The team had to depend far too often upon the success of one or two batsmen. The keenness and sportsmanship of the individual players is to be commended.

W.R.R.

THE UNDER 13 CRICKET XI

Record : Played 5. Won 4. Lost 1.

The team has had a very successful season, the only defeat being by the narrow margin of four runs.

The team was very well led by J. T. Taylor. The fielding was generally good, with some excellent throwing. The bowling was shared by A. C. Seamark, M. D. Bairstow and E. A. Brown. They all bowled well and showed a good control of length and direction. Brown turned his leg breaks admirably but lost his effectiveness whenever he tried to bowl too fast.

The batting was forceful and runs always came quickly. Good scores were recorded by Korn, Lock, Levett and Gilbert. There was an unfortunate tendency to disregard the defensive strokes and many wickets were lost for this reason. A sound defence is essential to any long innings.

Inter-Form Football Competition

These matches have been arranged for those boys in the senior school who are not good enough for the school teams.

Rules

1. The competition will be between the following forms:— 4F; 4M; 5th; 6th.
2. Two points will be awarded for a win and one for a draw. Goal averages will count.
3. Only those boys who have not been originally selected for a school team this term will be eligible to play.
4. Matches will take place as shown in the School Calendar.
5. Each team (form) will provide its own linesman.
6. The higher form will wear red shirts, the lower white, i.e. 6th (Red) v. 5th (White).
4F (Red) v. 4M (White).

C.C.F. Notes

Training continued normally during the Summer term, apart from interruptions caused by the G.C.E. examinations.

This year the contingent was exempt from official inspection. In place of this Colonel W. A. Heal, O.B.E., Brigade Colonel, the East Anglian Brigade, inspected us on May 26th. His concluding remarks suggested that he found us up to standard; he was favourably impressed by the simple demonstration mounted by senior Cadets, and by the senior N.C.O.s.

For the first time, the Basic Certificate Test was carried out within the unit this year. The results were very much as in previous years, there being only three failures.

The contingent has now been reorganised into three platoons to cater for the increased numbers.

Camp this year is at Beckingham, in Lincolnshire, and forty-one cadets are attending.

Scout Notes

This has been an unusually busy term for the Scout Troop. A contingent from the School acted as messengers and programme sellers at both the Suffolk Show and the Pageant of Magna Carta.

On Open Day the Scouts gave a display of Tent pitching and Pioneering. A rope and trestle bridge was built across the stream and a raft was constructed from scout staves and oil drums in order to ferry scouts and materials to the other side.

Much of the term has been spent in preparing for camp. The equipment has been cleaned and overhauled and several tents have been re-proofed.

The Senior Patrol has worked particularly hard and has had a very successful term. Two Senior Scouts have gained the Ambulance Badge, one the Forester Badge, three the Artist Badge, and one the Handyman Badge. During the Summer Camp several of the Seniors hope to pass the Camp Warden, Venturer, Hiker, Pioneer, Pathfinder, Master Cook and Map Maker Badges. Younger members will attempt the Junior equivalent of those badges. The area in which the camp is sited will certainly provide a formidable challenge to the Map-makers!

CADET CORPS, ABOUT 1905

CADET CORPS, ABOUT 1905

Natural History Activity

Most afternoons have been spent out of doors as the weather has been fine. Collections have been made, and a study of freshwater biology. In a series of quizzes and competitions run throughout the term, R. J. Smith gained 33 points, whilst Airey and Hodgson 2 were runners-up with 32.

Discussion Group

Inevitably the ground covered this term was limited by holidays and examinations. In addition to discussion of current events the following papers were read:—

Kydd: Television.

Peck: Crime.

Baker: Town and Country Planning.

Edwards: South Africa.

Gregory: Gambling and Licensing Laws.

Some, but not enough work went into the preparation of these papers, and considerable questioning was necessary to elicit further information.

Art Club Notes

During this Summer term both sections of the Art Club have been able to take full advantage of the fine weather and spend much of the time sketching out-of-doors.

Rather more craftwork has been done this term: lino-cutting proving particularly popular. Apart from this we have had plaster carving, clay modelling and casting, and pottery.

The highlight of the term was, of course, the Open Day Exhibition. Some of the senior boys served on the selection committee; others assisted in arranging and mounting the Exhibition. The aim of the selection committee was to make the Exhibition as fully representative of each form's work as was possible in the space available, whilst insisting on a reasonable standard of craftsmanship.

Chess

About two dozen Juniors and a dozen Seniors have been playing this term. Several in the Junior Club were beginners, and have now learned the rudiments of the game and are appreciating its possibilities. Sankey and Moss are at the top of the Ladder.

The chess in the Senior Club has been more of a gentle relaxation this term, and the standard has not been particularly high. McAllister and White are at the top.

F.W.B.

Science Club Notes

The Senior Science Club has enjoyed a successful term, the aeromodellers having been particularly active. More advanced models have appeared and these include control line aircraft. The photographers have been fairly active but it is hoped that in future they will plan their work more effectively and be a little more ambitious. The radio group started to build one valve receivers which can be modified by the addition of further stages of amplification.

The Juniors have done some successful practical work of a more formal nature and again the modellers have been busy. Three boys lectured to the group. Sparrow (2m) talked about printing and demonstrated his press. Thompson (2m), a keen numismatist, talked about the issue of the "New Bronze-Silver Coinage of 1816," and finally Bond (2m) lectured on the development of musical instruments.

On Speech Day the two science groups demonstrated some examples of practical work which had been done by each form during the current year. Several models made by Science Club members were exhibited and Doyle gave a display of control line flying using models of his own and other club members.

Junior Nets Activity

Some seventy boys have enjoyed this healthy, open-air activity during a term of delightful summer weather. Practice in the Nets and ordinary cricket games have been played by rota. The keen interest and increasing cricket skills of the boys testify to their appreciation of this activity. Invaluable help has been given in the Nets by some Sixth Form boys, notably Reed and Sitford.

W. R. R.

Physical Education Activity

The activities this term have been mostly concerned with athletics. Boys have been training for both our own Sports Day and the District and County Championships, in which we were well represented. Details of these meetings appear elsewhere in this issue.

It was unfortunate that swimming was not possible due to the failure of the Contractors to complete the pool on schedule. We can look forward however to a full term's swimming next year.

Towards the end of the term, Soft Ball and Badminton were played with great enjoyment and a fair degree of skill.

D. W. S.

Windsor House Notes

The House has had a most successful term. For the second year in succession we won the Inter-House Athletics Competition by a considerable margin. All members of both the Senior and Junior Cricket teams must be congratulated upon their enthusiasm and success in winning every match played.

Finally, Crowe and Rutterford must be congratulated upon gaining their Half-Colours at Cricket.

The House must now look forward to continued success next term at Football and Cross-Country.

M. J. WHITING.

Yorkist House Notes

For the Yorkist House the year has been very successful. We have gained first place in the Football Competition, and second place in Cricket, Athletics and Hockey, to finish in the lead in the Inter-House Competition. This is a very creditable result, and congratulations are due to all concerned.

Sports Day saw several outstanding performances by members of the Yorkist House, and the Athletics Team, under the capable leadership of Garrard, soon more than made up for the small number of standard points that the House had gained. Garrard is to be congratulated on winning both the School Athletics Championship and the Adrian Gould Cup for Field Events, as is Herbert for winning the Under 15 Championship.

In Cricket the House lacked a Senior Eleven that was strong as a whole, but a great effort was made, with good results. Reed deserves many thanks for captaining the team in a most efficient way, as do Gillingwater and Herbert, both of whom bowled extremely well.

I confidently look forward to a very successful year for the House next year, and hope that everyone will do his part, however small, in achieving this success.

Finally congratulations to Reed on being awarded First Eleven Colours and to Gillingwater on being awarded First Eleven Cricket Half-Colours.

M.L.W.

Lancastrian House Notes

The year's record of the Lancastrian House is very poor. During the Cricket term only one victory, against the Tudor House, was recorded.

In Athletics very few outstanding performances were recorded. Fuller, however, must be congratulated on his successes on Sports Day.

There were no Swimming Championships this year, but it is hoped that with the completion of the School baths the standard of swimming will improve and inter-House rivalry in the sports revive.

Lastly, our thanks to Mr. Brush for his services to the House. We all wish him well in his new post.

B.J.

Tudor House Notes

Throughout this term the House has been moderately successful. Unfortunately there has been no swimming but the Athletics and Cricket have been both interesting and keenly contested.

The Seniors lost all three of their cricket matches, mainly because there are only two or three cricketers in the whole team. The Juniors, on the other hand, won two of their three matches. We congratulate R. L. Flack on obtaining 1st XI Colours.

The House came third in the Athletic Sports. For the Juniors J. A. H. Knight, the U.13 Champion, did extremely well and for the Seniors R. L. Flack and D. S. Wolfenden scored successes.

In retrospect it is clear that the credit for the year's achievements must rest mainly on the Juniors. They have lost only one match in the whole year. As the House will in the future depend on the Juniors of today these results are very pleasing.

Next term D. S. Wolfenden will be Football Captain. Four of the seven new Prefects are Tudors. However, a great deal of the former inter-House rivalry which was so evident several years ago is still lacking. If every member of the House, from the House Captain to the smallest First Former, took a keener interest in the House and came to support our teams during House Matches, the House could return to its rightful position, namely first, instead of third.

Finally, many thanks are due to Mr. Rayner for the excellent manner in which he has unobtrusively conducted the affairs of the House during the year.

J.A.N.

School Notes

This term we welcome to our staff Mr. W. A. Ashenden and Mr. M. E. Arnison, and hope that their stay with us will be a long and pleasant one. We are sorry to learn that Mr. Brush will be leaving us this term. For those who have spent many hours under his care in the Laboratories, his departure will be a sad event; we wish him every success in his new post.

It is very pleasing to hear that Spanish is to be introduced into our curriculum. We hope that many will take this opportunity of learning a second language, for as well as being an extremely useful subject, Spanish is one of the most beautiful of all languages.

Many Fifth and Sixth Formers were privileged to have the chance of visiting Stratford-upon-Avon on June 2nd, where a most enjoyable day was spent both visiting places of historic interest and attending the performance of "Othello" at the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre. We are very grateful to the Headmaster for making the necessary arrangements, and it is sincerely hoped that many more similar visits may be arranged.

Corps Camp this year is at Beckingham, where it is hoped that the contingent will enjoy a week not merely "playing soldiers" but learning the real advantages of military training.
